

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

An author of a book of this type is indebted to many people; a project of this magnitude cannot be done alone. I am especially indebted because this book started with literally hundreds of hours of interviews and conversations with new hires, managers, and executives. NCNB Corporation (now Nations Bank), RJR-Nabisco, Andersen Consulting, DuPont, and C&P Telephone (a division of Bell Atlantic), in particular, provided extensive support for this project by arranging for me to spend time with many of their employees. They cannot be thanked enough. In addition, individuals from other companies, such as Meridian Bank, Texas Instruments, Corning Glass, Exxon, Secor Bank, Circuit City Stores, Hewlett-Packard, and J. P. Morgan, provided invaluable information and support over the years. Many thanks to the thousands of employers and graduates who have attended my training programs and workshops over the last ten years for the affirmation and for helping me refine my ideas. I have also been fortunate in having a core group of colleagues who have served as a sort of an “inner circle,” patiently advising, reviewing manuscripts, counseling, and freely offering their time and creativity for little reward beyond a thank-you. They include Dr. Susan Taylor of the College of Business at the University of Maryland College Park; Rick Sanders of RJR-Nabisco; Barry O’Donnell, formerly with NCNB; Ed McGarrell of Corning Glass; and Richard A. Swanson at the University of Minnesota.

My other thank-yous may be traditional ones, but that does not mean they are felt any less deeply or sincerely. My loving wife, Karen, gave up many hours of our life together for this project; I am deeply grateful for her patience and encouragement. Above and beyond the call of duty, she also analyzed every hour of interview tape to obtain the quotes for this book. A special thanks, too, to Sharon Naquin, my trusted assistant who helped me make this book much better than the first!
